GIRLS WHO DON'T GO TO CHURCH

Thou art so very sweet and fair, With such a heaven in thine eyes, almost seems an over-care To ask thee to be good and wise."

Who can find it in his heart to cenure the working girl for indulging in a long, restful nap on the one morning of all other—the Sabbath?

Tempted by rosy dreams, she lets time slip away with her. She may be overtired. That is granted. Yet there is only one place on earth where she an go and be sure that all her worries and tribulations will be forgotten

That one place is church. A girl can easily form the habit of going and quite as easily contract the habit of not going. There is always a golden tie among those who are gathered there. They have their enjoyments and pleasures to look forward to. Elders look to see that there's plenty going on to attract, the young folks.

They arrange for sociables, cyster suppers cake and ice cream festivals, fairs and no end of delightful occasions, including sleighride parties, husking-bee frolics and barn dances. When it comes to marrying, sensible young men are strongly influenced favor of the girl who goes to urch. This is sufficient guarantee to a man that she is a good girl; just suc ha one as he could take to his mother and to the heart of his home folks. The girl who never sets her foot inside of a church door may be the best-hearted person in the world, but it is the one omission a pious never forgive.

The non-church going girl must find her entertainment as best she can. She seldom makes close, warm friends. If she is alone in the world and ill-ness overtakes her, who could she turn to as to the warm-hearted sisters of her church? Who would miss her if her place was vacant? No working

AS OLD AS THE HILLS.

Mrs. C. H. B. asks: "When did the saying 'As old as the hills' originate? Wit. I have heard there is quite an amusing incident connected with it. Is this Originally the description was intended to convey the meaning "As old as Time or the world's formation." A following for us to laugh over, taking that time-honored sentence for a basis: A census taker, whose duty it was to learn the name and age of each and every one of the inhabitants of a certain village, reached the home of two spinsters, Miss Phoebe and Miss Eliza Hill Upon learning his errand, the women stoutly refused to divulge their ages. After much persuasion and being assured they were liable to a heavy fine if they persisted in withholding the information, each in turn reluctantly whispered almost inaudibly the desired information in his ear. His upon Ann Bogart, the spinster call who lived next door, threatened to be entirely without result. Ann absolutely refused to divulge her age. At last. nvinced by the patient agent that she would be obliged to disclose it eventually-in addition to humiliating arrest and a fine, adding that the Hills, who lived next door, had given theirs under the ban of secrecy-Ann eaned forward with a smile, wink and a nod, and said in all seriousness, You may put down I'm as old as the

TWO LOVES TO WORRY OVER ship."

E. D. writes: I am a young man of 28, puzzled over the following: I was calling regularly on a young lady, and hinted that we ought to become engaged soon, when a very singular turn came to the affair. My sweetneart's best girl friend wrote me a onte asking me to call to consult over a little gift she was making for my girl's birthday, asking me not to mention it to any one, as she wished it to be a complete surprise. Not doubting her statement in any way, I went. There was this, that and the other thing to talk over with me about it, though I could not see that my judgment was of any account. The upshot of the affair was that one evening I found the "best friend" in tears when I reached her house. She told me m sweetheart had found out that had been calling and they had had a bitter falling out over it. She also astounded me with 'he confession that during those calls her heart had gone out to me despite all she could do. I went directly to the home of my Farmer Want Ads. One Cent a Word sweetheart to square matters up by explaining. She refused to see me. have written explaining all, but she will not reply. Her folks forbid her to see me again or have anything to do with me. Now, what am I to do? The best friend writes me the most sympathizing and comforting of let-ters. Now shall I turn to her or still hope to be reconciled to the girl I was so very nearly engaged to? I trust to your woman's judgment for advice.

You are in trouble of your brewing. No man can play with fire (attempt to call on two girls alternately) without getting singed. The "best enemy" played a most unworthy scheme upon the innocent girl who trusted her-to win her lover from her. She is not to be trusted. If you have done all that is possible to effect a reconciliation with your sweetheart and failed, you must let matters take their course. She is evidently holding off to see if you will take up with the other girl or not. Have nothing whatever to do with the treacherous friend and all yet may turn out well if she still loves you.

A HONEYMOON TRIP.

Stella R. writes: "I am a young girl soon to be married. I want to go to Washington for the wedding trip. My fiance declares it is no longer the mecca for honeymooners, the bridal couple most in the limelight having gone elsewhere. What do you think about it?"

Honeymooning is honeymooning whether in Washington or the Desert of Sahara. It's a matter of individual but it is the one omission a pious inclination. Country people hie to mother-in-law, if she gets one, will, Washington. Washingtonians flee to the country. So there you are
